30 County Fires Burn 300 Acres

Nearly 300 acres have burned in 30 fires in Appomattox county this year reported the warden David Smith on Tuesday. Latest fires in his report included one on David Wood's farm at the foot of Piney Mountain. An electric fence either fell down or was knocked down said Smith burning two - tenths of an acre Saturday afternoon, July 13.

The Harvey Thomas fire, near Spout Spring, burned six acres Saturday, July 13, and may possibly have been caused by lightning said Smith. On Monday, July 8, a fire broke out at the foot of Cole Mountain next to the old Walton farm, two miles west of Mt. Airy Church. That fire burned one - half acre, and was caused said the warden by lightning striking a tree nearly a full week before the fire. Smith said that though it sounds unbelievable, the fire burned inside the tree and then flared up on July 8.

"Be particular during this dry weather," said Warden Smith, in urging citizens to keep a close watch on fields and timberland.

Drought Causes Hay Shortage

The drought conditions in many Virginia counties have caused a shortage of hay and pasture. Some areas have experienced as little as three inches and less rainfall since last March and 61 counties have been declared disaster areas.

Because of the lack of feed, many producers have been forced to move livestock to market before they were fed out. This could considerably reduce the state's foundation herds of livestock unless the situation is remedied soon.

As estimated 200,000 tons or hay will be needed in Virginia between now and next spring.

The Virginia Department or Agriculture has located out-of-state areas where additional hay may be obtained. A small supply of hay has been found in some nearby states. Larger supplies have been found in western and northwestern states.

The Department will work closely with VPI and USDA to assist farmers in securing hay of a quality suitable for feeding purposes.

Council Approves Water And Sewage Survey Report

Town-County Dump Improved

At a cost less than half the original estimate, the Town-County dump just off the Red House road, is on the way to being a model site for economical trash disposal. An all-weather road leads to a ten foot ditch about 25 feet wide and hundred feet long. Individuals and town dumping trucks unload trash into the ditch, and fires reduce the debris to metal refuse. A bulldozer then scrapes this up and dumps it into deep gully plus sufficient earth to cover it at the rear of the property. Thus far, only one person has dumped trash outside the proper area, and there has been a noticeable decline in rats, flies, odor, and dogs who used to prowl the area. Appomattox County health department through its sanitarian G. A. Pitsenberger aided in design and development of the modified land fill. Town employees under the supervision of manager Charles Hunter did a great deal of the labor involved.

Votes To Buy Garbage Truck

This report, Mayor S. R. Lawson, stated, will be completed according to terms of the contract in 75 working days. Until the report is received, Lawson said, no contract will be let for the proposed sewage lagoon, nor any major changes made in the existing water and sewage system of the town.

New Garbage Truck

In other action, the councilmen voted to accept Grinel's Motor Company bid of $2,687.83 for a Ford truck to support a new 18 cubic foot capacity garbage truck from the Truck Equipment Corporation of Richmond. A truck of this type was demonstrated in Appomattox by the trucking firm about a month ago. Total cost will be slightly over $7,000.

Eight Point Survey

The report and survey by Hankins and Anderson will cost $1,- 950 according to the firm's letter circulated to councilmen. Included will be 1. a general field examination 2. small scale base map 3. flow test data 4. comments and observation 5. schematic map of proposed improvements 6. recommendations of general development of the system 7. an estimate of the priorities for necessary work to bring the system to maximum design condition 8. estimates of probable expenditures required making the recommended improvements.

Town-County Dump

Councilmen spoke of the many favorable comments received as a result of the improvements to the county - town dump. Town Manager Charles Hunter reported that the bulldozing operations had cost $500 with a total cost of the improvement so far at about $600.

The Thomas's were unaware of the blaze until volunteers came to their farm home with fire fighting ecuipment. The woodland fire came to within 200 feet of the fencing surrounding their home and farm buildings.
